German physicist Wilhelm Roentgen discovered X-strahlen, or X-rays, in the year 1895. He used X – the symbol for unknown quantities – because the nature of radiation was not yet known. It is perhaps fitting that Bell's top-of-the-line mountain helmet takes inspiration from Roentgen's discovery as its light weight, incredible venting and stylish looks are similarly imponderable. Featuring Bell's Fusion In-Mold Microshell, In-Mold bottom wrap, 19 gaping vents, GPS fit system, Cam-Lock levers and streamlined Blade visor, the X-Ray is... how you say?... Wunderbar!

TECHNICAL FEATURE

The Blade Visor

Bell's Blade visor mixes dramatic looks with top-notch functionality. Horizontal I-beam pins keep the visor in place with minimal intrusion on the helmet surface. Bell ellipse logo plugs are included to give the helmet a seamless look when the visor is detached.

The original idea behind this new mountain helmet was to outfit it with an air conditioner. Unfortunately we couldn't find a long enough extension cord. The good news is, with its 18 massive vents, the Influx feels air conditioned. Add our Fusion In-Mold Microshell, Blade Visor and our GPS fit system and you get top-notch features plus great cooling – all without the bank-breaking electric bill.
